– hereinafter referred to as Contributor –

The Contributor makes available to Univention GmbH, Mary-Somerville Str.1, 28359 Bremen, Germany, (hereinafter referred to as Univention) software expansions and extensions (hereinafter referred to as “Software expansions”) to the software, which may be licensed to third parties by Univention subject to different conditions (hereinafter referred to as Univention software). They are made available with the objective of integrating the corresponding expansions and extensions into the Univention software. In doing so, neither Univention’s right to the free licensing of Univention software including the Contributor’s expansions or extensions nor the Contributor’s right to the free licensing of his expansions or extensions should be restricted. In this respect, the Contributor declares the following:

1. The Contributor confirms that he holds the copyright and all user rights to the software expansion he has passed on to Univention. The Contributor confirms that these user rights to the software expansion have not previously been provided to third parties as exclusive user rights.
2. Univention confirms the acceptance of the software expansion by means of the compilation of the software expansion with the software.
3. The Contributor only assigns simple and non-exclusive user rights to the software expansion to Univention. The Contributor remains entitled to replicate, to edit, to reproduce publicly and to make the software expansion available under the AGPL or other licenses insofar as this is done in accordance with the software licences used by him to create the software expansion.
4. Univention is also entitled to offer the software expansion under other licences and licence models than the AGPL. Univention then holds the necessary replication, editing and processing rights for these further licensings as well as the right for public reproduction and the right to make them publicly available.

5. This agreement is subject to German Federal Law. The United Nations Convention on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods is hereby excluded. Insofar as the Contributor is a merchant (German: Kaufmann) in the sense of the German Commercial Code (HGB), jurisdiction is Bremen, Germany.
